

Video Conference with anyone in the world

VoxAir

Cloud-based service that offers multi-point conferencing without investing in expensive infrastructure

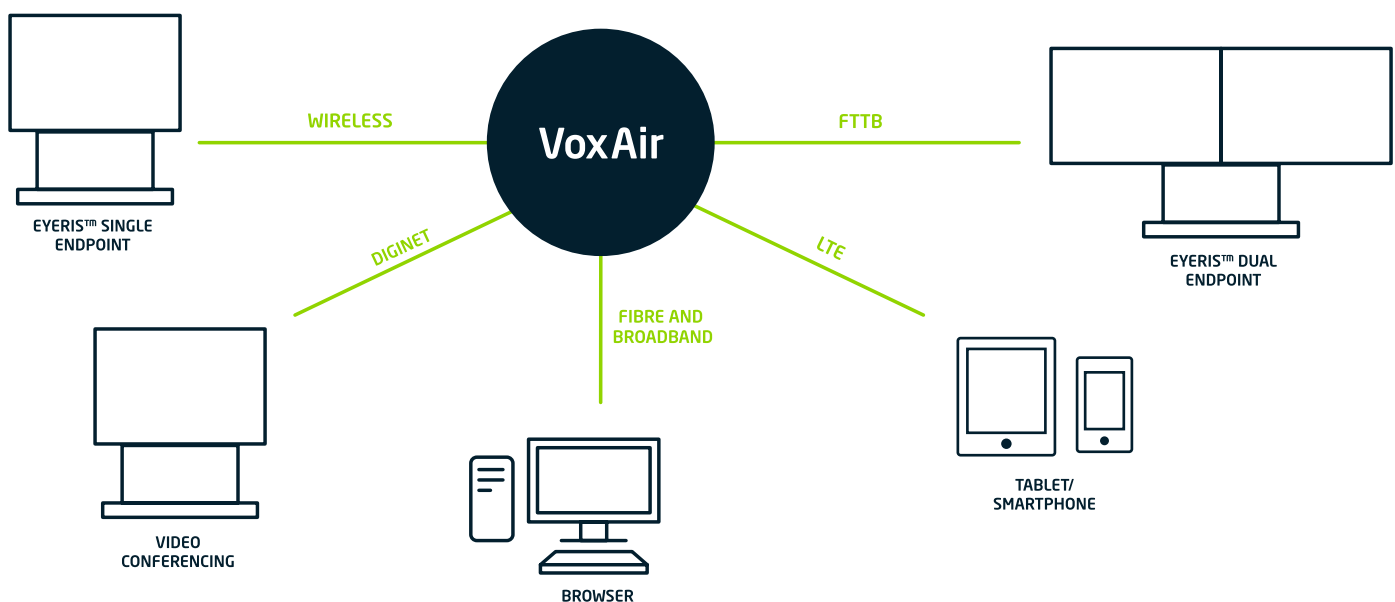

- Bring room systems, smart phones, PCs or tablets into the conference
- Supports Skype for Business integration
- Use for audio-only and video participants
- Vendor independent
- Suitable for IP connections

Product overview

VoxAir, from Vox, offers you the option of connecting to any formal video conferencing equipment in the world at any time without the need to invest in costly video conferencing bridge equipment. VoxAir is a cloud-based service, which allows you to call over IP or SIP and connect you to any other "standards-based" video conferencing system in the world. Furthermore, you can mix audio-only, desktop video and room-based video systems in the same meeting. The Vox multi-point video conferencing service is ad-hoc and available 24/7/365, which ensures that your calls are connected, managed and terminated on time.

How it works

Features and benefits

- Provides everyone in any size organisation with enterprise quality video, audio and content conferencing
- VoxAir for web browsers does not require any downloads and is plugin-free
- Virtual meeting rooms gives you a dedicated number where you can conduct all your meetings whether video or audio-only
- Allows one-to-one connectivity on demand to anyone outside your company network over IP
- Ease of use. Simply dial regular numbers, as you would an ordinary phone
- Enables multiple parties to dial into an assigned video conferencing bridge on demand
- No capital outlay
- Monthly subscription fees at a fraction of the cost of other high-quality video conferencing solutions
- Skype for business integration as standard

Is it complicated?

No. Making a video call is as easy as placing a regular phone call.
