Product Overview

You know the drill. You and your staff are diligently working from home when, suddenly, load shedding strikes. Not only are your unsaved documents probably lost and your momentum killed, but productivity drops to level zero. We've been there, and we've felt your pain.

With working from home being the new normal, your employees are heavily reliant on technology such as laptops, mobile phones, printers and overall connectivity. In order to stay on the pulse, these need to stay online.

The obvious solution would be a generator, but unfortunately this is unaffordable to most households. Fear not, because Vox has a solution - two UPS models designed specifically for the consumer market.

Vox Consumer UPS Solutions

Fibre to the Business UPS

Designed for users that just want to keep their internet on during load shedding. This model allows you to keep your Fibre or LTE router connected for up to four hours whilst the power is down.

Stay connected so you can continue streaming your favourite TV series, browse social media and surf the web while your neighbours sit in the dark.

Key Features

- 40W power output up to 4 hours uptime
- Activates automatically
- Small and compact
- 24/7 support

Home Office UPS

Designed for users that need more than connectivity and are heavily dependent on technology - connectivity, laptops, mobile phones, printers and collaboration tools.

The Vox Home Office UPS delivers enough to keep your home office up and running for up to 4 hours when load shedding strikes.

Key Features

- 500W power output up to 4 hours uptime
- Activates automatically
- Robust and portable
- 24x7 support
